BENTON HARBOR

Hammers to fly again at Harbor Shores

By JULIE SWIDWA
HP Staff Writer

BENTON HARBOR — Two new neighborhoods will sprout up along the golf course at Harbor Shores next summer.

Enclave, the newest residential neighborhood, will border the No. 6 fairway. Champions Village Golf Villas, rental cottages, will border the No. 1 fairway near the clubhouse and will be suited to golf getaway foursomes.

"These were always part of the master plan. Because of the inventory we've sold and improvement in the real estate market, we can add these now," said Kerry Wright, real estate director for Harbor Shores.

Enclave will be a residential neighborhood that will border the No. 6 fairway across from the Trailside neighborhood built earlier. Wright said it will consist of six single-family houses priced between $350,000 and $500,000.

"These will be perfect for people looking for a second home under a $500,000 budget and within walking distance to the beach," Wright said.

The first Enclave home will be ready for occupancy in June 2015, he said.

The Champions Village Golf Villas will start with three cottages intended to be used as rentals.

"We'll develop about 10 lots, but right off the bat we're going to build three cottages. We think we have two of the three pre-sold already. The owners will likely rent them out. We're becoming a destination and, because of the wedding venues St. Joseph and Benton Harbor have become, we think the owners of the villas will likely rent them out."

Each villa will have four bedrooms, four baths, a kitchen and living room. The units will border the No. 1 fairway near the clubhouse, and "stay-and-play" packages will likely be offered, Kerry said. The villas are expected to be ready by Memorial Day next year.

"We've been working on these for quite some time. Vertical construction hasn't started but the infrastructure is started. You'll see pavement there by Nov. 15," Wright said.

To date, Harbor Shores has sold 75 properties since 2010.

"We're absolutely pleased with that," Wright said. "Historically, with the economic downturn we experienced, I don't think Harbor Shores could have picked a more challenging time for a project of this scope, and

Berrien ponders gun rules for county buildings

By SCOTT AIKEN
HP Staff Writer

ST. JOSEPH — Berrien County commissioners have begun a discussion on whether guns, concealed or not, should be prohibited in county buildings.

The board's Administration Committee took up the issue Thursday. No step was taken to initiate a motion or resolution on the matter.

The committee's four members expressed differing opinions, with some leaning toward keeping guns out.

"We have topics that are very near to people's hearts," said Commissioner Catherine Thieneman. "It's a hazard."

Commissioner Marletta Seats said citizens in the audience at past board meetings have been intimidated by someone apparently carrying a concealed gun.

Some commissioners oppose creating a restriction on people who are legally carrying.

Those who have obtained permits for concealed pistols are presumed to be lawful, said Commissioner Mac Elliott.

Board Chairman Jon Hinkelman said he does not support imposing such a restriction on people who are within the law.

During the discussion, commissioners said that putting a firearms prohibition into effect would require having qualified people stationed at the doors of county buildings to check or possibly install metal detectors.

Currently, no weapons are allowed in the Courthouse in St. Joseph or the South County Building court in Niles. There are no restrictions at the county Administration Center in St. Joseph or other building.

Under state law, people licensed to carry a concealed pistol are prohibited from bringing the weapon into a school or on school property, day care center, sports arena or stadium, tavern, hospital, college or university dormitory or casino.

Concealed guns cannot be brought into any facility or on property owned or operated by a church, synagogue, mosque, temple or other place of worship unless presiding officials allow the practice.

In 2001, the Michigan Supreme Court ordered that weapons are not permitted in any courtroom, office or other space used for official court business. Judicial employees can carry guns with the chief judge's prior permission consistent with the court's written policy.

Nobel Peace Prize goes to India-Pakistan duo

By KATY DAIGLE
Associated Press

NEW DELHI — One is Muslim, the other Hindu. One a Pakistani, the other Indian. One a school girl just starting out in life, the other a man with decades of experience.

Despite their many differences, 17-year-old Malala Yousafzai and 60-year-old Kailash Satyarthi will be forever linked – co-winners of the 2014 Nobel Peace Prize, honored for risking their lives for the rights of children to education and to lives free of abuse. Their selection was widely acclaimed, their heroism undeniable.

But something more was at work here: In awarding the prize Friday, the Nobel Committee also sent a blunt message to the rival nations of India and Pakistan that if two of their citizens can work for a common goal, their governments too could do better in finding common ground.

The two nations have almost defined themselves by their staunch opposition to one another. They became enemies almost instantly upon gaining independence in 1947 from imperial Britain, and have since fought three full-scale wars over various issues, including competing claims to the Himalayan region of Kashmir that sits between them. Just this week, their troops have hurled mortar shells and firing guns at one another across the Kashmir border, with civilian casualties in double digits.

The Nobel Committee's chairman, Thorbjoern Jagland, acknowledged his panel gave the prize to Yousafzai and Satyarthi partly to nudge the two countries together, though he cautioned that the impact of the award should not be overestimated.

"You can see that there is a lot of extremism coming from this part of the world. It is partly coming from the fact that young people don't have a future. They don't have education. They don't have a job," Jagland told The Associated Press. "We want to show that people in all religions can come together in a common cause."

The Indian winner immediately spoke about the potential to bridge old divides.

About Malala, Satyarthi said: "I will invite her in a new fight for peace in our region." He also said this year's choice to award one

Boy hurt after fall from trailer

By ANDREW LERSTEN
HP Staff Writer

BANGOR — A Bangor Township boy, 6, sustained skull and neck fractures Thursday after an apparent fall from a moving utility trailer.

The incident occurred at about 10:30 a.m. on 66th Street, about a quarter of a mile from the boy's home.

Van Buren County sheriff's officers responded to a report of a boy found on the road.

The boy's grandfather had left the boy's home in a pickup truck, which was towing an enclosed trailer. Police speculate the boy had gotten inside the trailer before it started moving, and then fell onto the road as it was being towed, Lt. David Walker said.

The boy's grandfather, 60, said he had seen the boy on his bicycle before he left the driveway, and had closed the doors to the trailer. The grandfather stopped at an intersection, and another motorist approached and told him the doors to the trailer were open.

That's when he saw his grandson on the road, being assisted by yet another motorist, Walker said.

The boy was listed in stable condition Friday at Bronson Methodist Hospital in Kalamazoo, Walker said.

The department released no names.

Critics: Many new wheelchair ramps go 'nowhere'

DETROIT (AP) — Along one half-mile stretch of crumbling sidewalks in Detroit, there are 52 new sets of wheelchair ramps. Some provide access to an empty lot where a middle school was razed in 2009. On many corners, sidewalks end after the ramps.

The ramps are being built as part of a decade-long effort to force Detroit into compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act. But the efforts are facing criticism as the bankrupt city installs ramps in areas with little traffic while well-traveled areas, including some near downtown, still don't have them.

"You drive down some of these streets, and there are blocks of no houses but pretty new curbs," said Sherman Hayes, 84, a retired nurse who lives nearby. "Look at all these ramps to nowhere. It makes my blood boil."

The city has spent $30 million over eight years to install 25,000 ramps, and officials estimate that $60 million more must be spent to build another 50,000, The Detroit News reported. The ramps cost about $10,000 per intersection.

A federal court order requires the city to build ramps on every road it resurfaces as well as at every local intersection of major roads, said Ron Brundidge, director of the city's department of public works.

"We aren't disputing the need for sidewalks to be accessible for all, but someone could make an argument that it isn't the best use for taxpayer dollars when you look at the money spent and compare it to how much it is used," Brundidge said.

Discussions had been started about finding a compromise with wheelchair users, but those ended after Detroit sought bankruptcy protection last year.

"We'd rather see the city's limited resources applied to areas with more foot traffic," said Michael Harris, executive director of Michigan Paralyzed Veterans of America. "It makes absolutely no sense to build them in some of these areas."

Detroit signed an agreement with the U.S. Department of Justice in 2004 to build all the ramps by 2007. The veterans sued in 2006, however, due to a lack of progress, said Denise Heberle, an attorney for the group.

"We hear it all the time: 'Poor bankrupt Detroit has to put up curb cuts it can't afford because of those paralyzed veterans,'" she said. "If Detroit had followed the law a long time ago, it wouldn't be in this position."

Jury deadlocked over fatal shooting by Detroit cop

By COREY WILLIAMS
Associated Press

DETROIT — Jurors were deadlocked and a judge declared a mistrial Friday for a Detroit police officer charged with recklessly handling his gun and killing a 7-year-old girl – the second time a verdict couldn't be reached in the case.

The developments came after jurors indicated they were struggling to reach a unanimous decision in the case against Joseph Weekley, and Wayne County Circuit Judge Cynthia Gray Hathaway urged them to work out their differences. Weekley's first trial ended without a verdict in June 2013.

Hathaway said Friday that jurors gave her a note saying they were "hopelessly deadlocked."

Seven of the 12 jurors voted to acquit Weekley of recklessly using a firearm, a misdemeanor carrying a maximum punishment of two years in prison. It was the only count remaining after Hathaway last week dismissed a felony charge of involuntary manslaughter against Weekley in the death of Aiyana Stanley-Jones.

"There has not been one single day that has gone by since that day where I have not thought about the loss of Aiyana, and I will be haunted by the tragedy for the rest of my life," Weekley said in a statement to radio station WWJ on Friday before the mistrial was declared. "No family ever deserves to lose a child, and I have nothing but sympathy for the family of Aiyana Jones."

A decision about a third trial will be disclosed in court on Nov. 21, the prosecutor's office said.

"I don't understand how we can go through this again and have all this evidence brought forth and there not be a verdict either way," the girl's uncle, Londell Fields, told reporters after the mistrial. "I don't think it's fair because he's a police officer that he gets to get away with this again. That's wrong to me."

The family has filed a civil lawsuit against the Police Department.

"This was an emotional case. There were tears in this room," the jury foreman said. The judge wouldn't allow the man – a minister – and other jurors to have their names used by news reporters.

Aiyana was shot in the head while she slept on a couch in May 2010. Weekley, a member of an elite police unit, was the first officer through the door of the home during a chaotic search for a murder suspect.

Weekley's submachine gun fired seconds after a stun grenade was thrown through a window to confuse anyone inside. He didn't testify but has insisted that he mistakenly pulled the trigger during a struggle with Mertilla Jones, the girl's grandmother.

Police at the scene were accompanied by a camera crew from a TV reality show, "The First 48." The midnight raid was recorded from the outside, not the inside where Aiyana was shot.

A prosecutor told jurors the story about a struggle with the grandmother was a lie intended to cover up Weekley's carelessness.

"His training says, keep your finger off the trigger. ... All he had to do is follow his training and we wouldn't be here," prosecutor Rob Moran said Tuesday.

The grandmother denied interfering with Weekley. Defense attorney Steve Fishman urged the jury to disregard the grandmother's testimony, though, especially after she said she believed Aiyana was intentionally killed.

"No amount of training, no number of missions eliminates the possibility that something can happen," Fishman said in his closing argument.

First lady stumps for Dems in Michigan, Iowa

By JEFF KAROUB AND CATHERINE LUCEY

First lady Michelle Obama stands with Michigan gubernatorial candidate Mark Schauer, left, and Senate candidate, Rep. Gary Peters during a campaign rally for them in Detroit on Friday. Obama came to heavily Democratic Detroit to rally support for Peters, a suburban Detroit congressman hoping to succeed retiring Democrat Sen. Carl Levin after 36 years in office.

DES MOINES, Iowa — Democratic candidates in Iowa and Michigan for hotly-contested open U.S. Senate seats got a charisma boost Friday from the White House.

Not from the commander in chief, but his more popular wife.

Michelle Obama campaigned in Des Moines for Rep. Bruce Braley, who critics say is losing the personality war to Republican Joni Ernst, a likable state Senator who has touted her farm upbringing and military background.

Earlier in the day, the first lady stopped in heavily Democratic Detroit to support Rep. Gary Peters, who is leading in the polls for an open Michigan seat against Republican Terri Lynn Land.

Before a crowd of about 1,200 at Drake University, Obama urged supporters to vote early in the Iowa race that is one of the closest in the nation and is viewed as crucial if Democrats hopes to stave off a Republican drive for a six-seat gain to take a Senate majority.

"When we stay home, they win. They're assuming that we won't care. They're hoping that we're not organized and energized and only we can prove them wrong," Obama said of Democrats, whose partisans tend not to turn out as enthusiastically in midterm elections.

The first lady has become something of a campaigner-in-chief, most recently for Midwest candidates also including Wisconsin and Illinois. She drew an enthusiastic response in Des Moines, though she mispronounced the name Braley – leaving out the "r" – several times and was finally corrected by the audience.

"I've been traveling too much," Obama said contritely.

Obama also referred to Braley as a Marine Corps veteran, which he is not. Braley's staff said she meant to refer to Braley's late father, who served in the marines. His opponent Ernst is a lieutenant colonel in the Iowa National Guard.

In Detroit, Obama stumped for Peters and Democratic gubernatorial challenger Mark Schauer, a congressman from 2009-11. The race is tight though some recent polls show GOP Gov. Rick Snyder with a slight edge.

"It really boils down to one fundamental truth: Gary and Mark ... understand what Michigan families are going through," Obama said. "They are going to be on your side every single day out in Lansing and in Washington, D.C."

Obama drew a rousing response from the audience in Detroit, the largest municipality in the United States to file for bankruptcy and also home to the rebounding domestic auto industry.

Democrats have sought the first lady's help even though many have avoided appearing with her husband, whose job approval rating has sunk to the low 40s. She is viewed positively by 62 percent of the public, according to the most recent Pew Research Center survey.

Berrien wants to hear from citizens

By HP STAFF

BERRIEN CENTER — The Berrien County Parks Commission is seeking public comment on proposed master plans for Madeline Bertrand County Park in Niles Township and a proposed county park in Watervliet.

The commission also wants suggestions on the five-year parks plan. The plan will help guide the county in park and recreation planning for 2015-19 and serve as a reference for future decisions.

The master plans for Madeline Bertrand County Park and the Watervliet park are to be reviewed at a Parks Commission meeting at 5:30 p.m. Wednesday at Love Creek County Park, 9292 Huckleberry Road, Berrien Center. Officials encourage interested people to attend the session.

Parks Director Brian Bailey said the master plans and the county's five-year parks plan can be reviewed on the county website after Oct. 16. The website address is berriencounty.org/parks.

Written comments can be set to: Berrien County Parks Commission, 701 Main St., St. Joseph 49085, or call 983-7111, Ext. 8435.

Hartford gets first responder grant

Fire equipment parade today at middle school

By ANDREW LERSTEN
HP Staff Writer

HARTFORD — The Pokagon Fund has given the Hartford Fire Department $7,886 to benefit the department's medical first responder services.

The grant will be used to outfit the department's Ford Explorer to convert it into the department's medical first responder vehicle, Chief Rob Harting told the Hartford Township Board Thursday night.

In other departmental news, the fire department is hosting a fire equipment parade at 1 p.m. today, to be followed by a "safety jamboree" for kids at the Hartford Middle School, the chief said.

In other matters, the board discussed a recent complaint from a resident about their neighbors discharging loud firearms.

The township has no noise ordinance, noted Supervisor Ron Sefcik.

But, "If it's shaking windows, it's got to be something big (that's being discharged)," Sefcik said.

Van Buren County Sheriff's Deputy Phil Sciuletti, who exclusively patrols the township, did say he will continue to research whether there are firearms or other laws that may used to handle the complaints, in the absence of a noise ordinance.

Man arraigned in rummage sale robbery

By ANDREW LERSTEN

STEVENSVILLE — A Stevensville man was in Berrien County Trial Court on Friday in connection with the theft of cash from a garage sale and a subsequent car crash that injured a St. Joseph woman.

Joseph M. Fox, 22, could face up to 15 years in prison if convicted of the felony charge of unarmed robbery, Lincoln Township Police Chief Dan Sullivan said.

Fox was arraigned Friday on the unarmed robbery charge, and on a misdemeanor charge of leaving the scene of a personal injury crash, the chief said.

Fox allegedly stole a cash box from a garage sale along Pheasant Run Thursday morning, and then allegedly caused a two-car crash nearby on Marquette Woods Road, police said earlier. Police said Fox fled the crash scene on foot, leaving his car behind. He was later apprehended, but the stolen cash was not recovered.

Solid finances for BH-SJ wastewater plant

Plant gearing up for major improvement work

By SCOTT AIKEN
HP Staff Writer

An audit shows that the Benton Harbor-St. Joseph Wastewater Treatment Plant is in good shape financially as the facility develops plans for a $7 million improvement project.

A report presented to the plant's Board of Commissioners by Kenley Penner of Plante Moran in September gave a clean opinion, the highest assurance level.

The audit, which covered the 2013-14 fiscal year, which ended June 30, found the plant to be in a sound financial position.

Operating income from bulk treatment charges combined with non-operating interest income and revenue from other sources, including laboratory fees, was adequate to meet operating expenses.

Penner credited the plant for good record-keeping and timeliness in preparing for the audit.

The fiscal year ended with actual operating income higher than budgeted income by about $121,000. Operating expenses for the year were under budget by about $327,500.

Savings were realized in labor, $109,700, biosolids handling costs, $82,000, and public utilities, $57,100.

Natural gas costs were below budget for the year, a savings attributed to the plant's new dual fuel boilers, which operated for all of the fiscal year. The boilers are fueled by natural gas or methane gas produced in the plant's anaerobic digestion process.

Plant Manager Tim Lynch said the plant's operating and maintenance budget for the 2014-2015 fiscal year is about $2.9 million in expenses and $3.93 million in revenue.

Lynch said the design engineering phase of a major project is proceeding with construction expected to start in the second half of the fiscal year.

The $7 million project involves a major upgrade of the headworks, the plant's intake, replacing aging equipment.

"It's old technology and this will improve the plant's performance immensely," Lynch said of the scheduled project.

Completion of the work will eliminate a number of operating challenges, he said.

The project is to include improvements in grit collection, screening, metering, primary settling tanks and other renovations.

Other projects scheduled for the current year are replacement of the electric blower and improvements to the concrete gallery deck.

All the projects are being funded from reserves set aside to meet capital needs. The plant generally uses a "pay as you go" strategy for capital improvements that does not require borrowing.

The plant's five-year capital plan calls for an expenditure of $12,200,000 in facility improvements.

Of the amount, about $11,236,000 is available to meet capital requirements. The balance will be generated through operating revenues.

Historic NB church sold

New owner promises to respect 1861 structure

By JANET HAYES
HP Correspondent

NEW BUFFALO — New Buffalo's oldest active church is about to be sold.

Members of Waters Edge United Methodist Church unanimously approved the recommendation of their board of trustees to sell the landmark church at 24 S. Whittaker St. and adjacent parsonage and property to an unnamed buyer at an undisclosed price.

The church was built in 1861 and is recognized as the oldest, continuously used religious house in New Buffalo. There have been some changes and addition over the years, but the original lines remain little changed. The brick parsonage was built in the 1940s.

The potential buyer is a Ft. Wayne, Ind., business and the plans for the building have been examined by the church's board but will remain confidential until closing, according to Trustee Pete Rahm.

He read a letter from the new owner stating: "We want to share with you that we love this building and that our offer to purchase is largely because we love this space. We plan to keep this building intact, revitalize some of its original charms and features and celebrate its history. It is our desire to continue the legacy of being a touchstone for the community, a gathering place for celebrations and a place where all are welcome."

The letter, signed "Kristie and Lavinia," included their intention to dedicate a space to the history of the community.

Although only congregation members could vote, the public was invited to comment during the Oct. 2 meeting.

Before the vote, Judi Herrbach Lowe, who now lives elsewhere but said she and her family were longtime church members and she attends whenever possible, asked that the group to keep in mind that church represented the hard work and hopes of generations that had celebrated the key points of their lives within it.

She urged the group to seek "a good buyer to honor the integrity of the building" and one that would find a way to "benefit the community of New Buffalo at the crossroads of the town during a watershed moment."

Herrbach said she had done research and found that there were state and federal funds available to help with historic preservation and maintenance projects.

Rahm said trustees sought only buyers who wanted the buildings preserved and had not talked with interested parties who would not reveal their plans.

Herrbach asked if the buyers had the financial backing to prevent a situation similar to Country Mates, another New Buffalo historical building that was demolished at the end of September after remaining vacant and falling into disrepair following the purchase by an investor.

The meeting ended with the pastor, the Rev. Brad Bartelmay, announcing that on Nov. 30, the last day in the old church, there would be a ceremony to close out the congregation's relationship with the old site and take a large step to a new locale to develop more roots for generations to come.

The congregation is building a new, larger church on 5 acres along M-239 near I-94's Exit 1. The congregation is raising $1.5 million for the one-story, 10,000-square-foot structure.

On Friday, Sears Holdings Corp. announced that it detected a data breach at its Kmart stores that started in August 2014, affecting certain customers' credit and debit card accounts. Kmart becomes latest retailer hit by data theft

NEW YORK — Sears Holdings Corp. announced late Friday that it detected a data breach at its Kmart stores that started last month and that certain customers' credit and debit card accounts may have been hacked.

The data theft at Kmart is the latest in a string of incidents that have hit several big retailers, including Target, Supervalu and Home Depot. For the Hoffman Estates, Illinois-based parent company, however, the breach comes at a time when it's struggling with losses and sales declines as it fights to stay relevant with shoppers.

Sears Holdings, which also operates Sears stores, says that Kmart's information technology department detected on Thursday that its payment data systems had been breached. But it couldn't provide the number of affected cards. However, it said that it was able to remove the malware. It also noted that based on a forensic investigation to date, no personal information, debit cards, PIN numbers, email address, and social security information were obtained by the hackers. And there's no evidence that Kmart.com shoppers were affected.

Sears says Kmart immediately launched a full investigation and is working with a leading security firm. It added that it's also working closely with federal law enforcement authorities and banking partners in this ongoing investigation. Kmart is also implementing further advanced software to protect customers' information.

The company said that it will be providing free credit monitoring protection for those customers who shopped with a credit or debit card in its Kmart stores during the month of September through Thursday. It also emphasized that customers have no liability for any unauthorized charges if they report them in a timely manner, according to the policies of most credit card companies. Sears said that the most up-to-date information will be available on its website, kmart.com and customers can contact its customer care center at 888-488-5978.

The announcement comes a few weeks after Home Depot, the nation's largest home improvement chain, said that a data breach that lasted for months at its stores in the U.S. and Canada affected 56 million debit and credit cards. That's far more than a pre-Christmas 2013 attack at Target Corp., which compromised 40 million credit and debit cards.

The size of the theft at Home Depot trails only that of TJX Companies' heist of 90 million records disclosed in 2007.

Target's high-profile breach pushed banks, retailers, and credit card companies to increase security by speeding the adoption of microchips in U.S. credit and debit cards. Supporters say chip cards are safer, because unlike magnetic strip cards that transfer a credit card number when they are swiped at a point of sale terminal, chip cards use a one-time code that moves between the chip and the retailer's register.

Court rules for bank in tax case

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — A court in Puerto Rico has ruled that a deal calling for the U.S. territory's government to repay $230 million to one of the island's biggest banks is valid.

The ruling issued late Friday by the Court of First Instance aims to resolve a lengthy financial feud between the government and Doral Financial Corp.

Doral Bank had argued it was owed a $230 million refund in overpaid taxes. The government originally agreed the bank had the right to request the refund but then sought to back out of the deal.

Doral officials are welcoming the court ruling, but Puerto Rico's Treasury Department says it will appeal.

A heart full of grace

Insights

Mabel was 91 when she died on Aug. 4. All those things – sometimes incredible things that are said after people die about how loving and kind they were – were really true about Mabel.

Mabel's husband is still with us. His name is Jim. At Mabel's "Celebration of Life" service at First Presbyterian Church, Jim revealed the secret of his life with his beloved wife. He said, "Every morning when we woke up, we looked at each other, called each other by name and told each other we loved each other, and every night when we were getting ready for bed, we looked at each other, called each other by name and told each other we loved each other." Then, Jim had each of us look at our spouse or other loved one, say their name and then say "I love you." There was hardly a dry eye in the place.

You see, when Jim and Mabel said that to each other every day, they were not only affirming their love, they were remembering who they are, honoring the other and making a decision. They were remembering that they belonged to each other. They were affirming each other's dignity. They vocalized a decision to live in love, even on those days when Mabel wanted Jim to make the bed and he didn't want to, or when Jim drove Mabel crazy messing up the kitchen making goose pate. In Jim and Mabel's case, loving actions and more than 55 years of faithfulness grew out of those daily affirmations. And the actions and faithfulness, in turn, gave deepened commitment to those daily affirmations.

Now, you and I both know that words can sometimes be cheap. The words "I love you" have been used over the millennia to control, abuse and manipulate people. Just because we say those words to a person or hear them in our own ears doesn't guarantee anything in this life.

But since Mabel's service, I've found myself thinking how different the world would be if each day when we woke up and when we went to sleep, we remembered who we are and recommitted ourselves to those we love. I've found myself thinking how different the world might be if we took the time at least twice a day to stop for a moment, look people we care about in the eye, took the time to really notice them, say their names and affirmed their value in our lives.

There's been a lot of terrifying and evil things going on in the world these days. Ferguson, the Ukraine, Syria, ISIS, Ebola, an ice bucket challenge turned into abuse, polarization in Congress and the like. What can one person do in the face of this kind of evil?

Martin Luther King Jr., talking about service and about what it takes to change the evil in the world, once said, "All you need is a heart full of grace and a soul generated by love." We cannot underestimate the power of living our lives in faithful love. Imagine how different this would be if each person could faithfully affirm and live their love for the significant people in their lives.

Mabel was one of those people who could sit at the table in our church's fellowship hour with anyone. Rich people, people who hadn't had a meal in two days, women floating on scent of Chantilly and those who reeked like rotten eggs – white, black, sane and crazy, Mabel knew how to show acceptance and love to all. Mabel learned this at the table of her Lord, Jesus Christ, as her heart was transformed by his love. And this grew deep within her in the environment of intentional love she nurtured each day with Jim.

She had a "heart full of grace and a soul generated by love," and we may never know the extent the world was changed, and still is being changed by her presence.

A liberal strategy to save the Episcopal Church

Terry Mattingly

Once upon a time, the Anglican bishops at the global Lambeth Conference boldly declared the 1990s the "Decade of Evangelism."

This effort was supposed to spur church growth – and it did, in the already-booming Anglican churches of Africa, Asia and across the "Global South." But in the lovely, historic sanctuaries of England and North America? Not so much.

"There was some lip service given to evangelism at that time," said Ted Mollegen, a businessman with decades of national Episcopal Church leadership experience. Membership totals continued to spiral down, and the Decade of Evangelism "basically faded away without much success ... because of a lack of effort and institutional commitment."

The Episcopal Church then created a "20/20 Vision" task force committed to doubling baptized membership by 2020. The goal was a renewed evangelism emphasis, along with programs for spiritual development, emerging leaders, church planting and improved work with children, teens and college students. Mollegen was the task force's secretary and a founding member of the Episcopal Network for Evangelism.

Episcopalians, however, promptly entered yet another period of doctrinal warfare and schism, symbolized by the departure of many large evangelical parishes following the 2003 election of a noncelibate gay priest as bishop of New Hampshire. Mollegen served on the national church's executive council from 2003-09.

While legal battles roll on, and the hierarchy wrestles with tighter and tighter budgets, the 77-year-old Mollegen hasn't given up on starting more parishes dedicated to sharing his church's approach to faith. Thus, he recently released a 66-page church-growth manifesto to Episcopal bishops and lay leaders.

At some point, he said, Episcopalians – as well as members of other shrinking liberal flocks – must create their own effective brand of evangelism, including modern ways of discussing sin and salvation, heaven and hell.

Evangelicals have "traditionally placed more emphasis on making converts than those of us in mainstream churches and on the left," he stressed. "They have a strong motivation, since they believe that if people don't convert to Christianity then they're going to hell. I don't believe that, of course, and most Episcopalians don't believe it, either."

The church-growth stakes are high, as Mollegen has noted for years. Episcopal Church membership peaked at 3.6 million in 1966 and is now at 1.9 million, with 650,000 in church on typical Sundays.

More than half of U.S. parishes had an average Sunday attendance of 70 or less, according to 2009 statistics, and roughly a third of active Episcopalians are 65 or older.

The bottom line: The Episcopal flock shrank 42 percent in an era in which the U.S. population grew 70 percent. Mollegen stressed that the news will get worse before it gets better, since "such a high percentage of our members are past their childbearing years" and Americans "under the age of 35 are less likely to join institutions of any kind these days, either secular or religious."

What to do? In addition to stressing church-growth basics from the 20/20 task force, Mollegen has urged Episcopalians to defend their liberal beliefs, rather than simply teaching "people who theologically are still Baptists how to use Prayer Books. You haven't completed the job until you've taught them what the Bible really is, and how to react to it with intellectual integrity."

Also, parish leaders in some parts of the country may – with permission from their bishops – try to court people who are "spiritual" rather than doctrinally minded by tweaking liturgies to say that worshippers merely "trust" ancient Christian creeds, as opposed to vowing that they "believe" them.

In addition to seeking cultural progressives – such as families of gays and lesbians – Mollegen's manifesto argues that Episcopalians should increase marketing efforts to "disaffected Roman Catholics." After all, Episcopalians claim Catholic roots, yet "we have avoided such latter-day aberrations as Mariolatry; misogyny; forced and unpopular clerical celibacy; widespread, persistent and covertly protected clergy ephebophilia; rejection of the most effective and convenient forms of birth control; and church leadership which both excludes and insultingly devalues lay leadership and women, and which is determinedly and unconsciously hostile to sexual minorities."

Eventually, he argued, many Catholics will embrace a spiritual home that is "more rational, more historically catholic, much more loving, and less hubris-encrusted." Outreach to disaffected Catholics, he added, may also "lead to improvements in how the Roman Catholic Church handles itself."

GOP has proven it is unfit to govern

Editor,

This is in reference to the opinion expressed by columnist Charles Krauthammer in the Oct. 5 edition of The Herald-Palladium. He stated, "But regaining the Senate would finally give the GOP the opportunity, going into 2016, to demonstrate its capacity to govern."

I am sure that he, along with other Republican apologists, would like to forget how their party governed from 2001 to 2007 when they essentially had control of all three branches of the American government.

When the GOP took over the reins of government in 2001, it inherited a federal budget that had a surplus and a financial plan that would result in surpluses for several years in the future. This inspired hope that the national debt might someday be retired. The Grand Old Party dashed that hope when it initiated a program of profligate spending like this never nation has never seen before. In the process the cost and size of the federal government was significantly increased.

When the Republicans came into power in 2001, they inherited a nation at peace with a growing economy. They quickly changed all that when they took America into an unnecessary war in two countries far away from the homeland. We are going to be paying for the cost of that foolishness for a century to come.

In spite of what Krauthammer has suggested, we do not need to wonder about Republicans capacity to govern the country because they've already shown what they would do when they once again hold the reins of power in America.

Appreciative of Proos and his legislative record

Editor,

I grew up in this area and went to school with John Proos. In school I knew he was nice and smart – that's about all one needs to know in school. After living in the Detroit area for 15 years (post college), I moved back to Southwest Michigan to raise my family and work on our family business in 2004. I hadn't seen John is nearly 20 years.

During his first campaign, he was speaking with all the candidates one evening at an Executive Women's Business event. John was the last speaker at the podium. I must admit I don't recall the topics discussed by many candidates, but I do remember that much of it seemed negative and counterproductive. When it came to be John's turn to speak (the event ran way over), he approached the podium and said something like, "It's been a long evening. You've been an amazing audience and listened to a lot. Please enjoy the rest of your evening with your families. Thank you."

That night, I was appreciative of his humility and compassion for the audience. As his constituent for the past 10 years, I have been appreciative of his service to and genuine concern for our community. Those are the things that matter to me many years after high school. So, as you may have guessed, on Nov. 4 I will again be casting my vote for John Proos for Michigan state senator.

Shocking NFL study demands action

The National Football League has bigger trouble than the disgusting domestic violence cases dominating headlines this fall. In September, it quietly released a study that revealed one-third of its players – one third – can expect to suffer long-term cognitive problems, including dementia, after retiring.

And this was a study commissioned by the league.

Listen up, you 46 players on the San Francisco 49ers' current active roster: Fifteen of you are toast.

Yet the NFL seems to shrug it off. The league's future should be at stake. What other career path carries a high danger of dementia? Outside of tobacco, it's hard to think of another industry that's as insidiously dangerous.

Fans, meanwhile, don't dwell on the details: Sure, it's a risky game, but hey, did you see the hit that linebacker put on the quarterback? Awesome! Have another beer.

If the NFL can't find a way to make football safer, then lawmakers should step in. Professional players are not known for saving and investing responsibly so they can care for themselves when their brains turn to mush. This will in part be a public cost – particularly for kids who get knocked silly in school and never make the big bucks.

Parents should be reassessing their kids' participation in Pop Warner and high school football. The risk of serious effects from concussions is higher to young players whose bodies and brains are not fully developed. And while some coaches are wonderful, others fail to balance kids' health with the win-at-all-costs spirit of sports today.

The benefits of football as it's now played are not worth the risk to young players. If they reach the point of a professional offer, as adults, they may decide the money is worth a one in three chance of dementia. But is that a choice you want to make for your child?

Schindler's immortal list and righteous life

Bruce Kauffmann
History Lesson

Steven Spielberg's wonderful movie, "Schindler's List," gets a few (very few) things wrong, but nicely captures the paradox that was Oskar Schindler, a Czechoslovakian-born industrialist who, prior to World War II, spied for the German Abwehr (espionage unit), joined the Nazi Party and helped ensure the German takeover of Czechoslovakia in 1939, which hastened Hitler's conquest of Eastern Europe.

Schindler was also an opportunist and when Germany conquered Poland in September of 1939, he moved to Krakow, where he bought a Jewish-owned enamelware factory for a fraction of its original worth and then contracted with the Nazi Schutzstaffel (SS) to supply him with Jewish laborers. Schindler was actually a terrible businessman – Jewish overseers mostly ran the factory – but he was a charmer who wined and dined, and bribed, important Nazi Party members, who awarded him with lucrative government contracts.

In short, Schindler was living large on the backs of Jewish slave labor when, in 1943, German soldiers raided a ghetto in Krakow, murdering Jews indiscriminately and shipping the rest to the Plaszow concentration camp, not far from Schindler's factory. Appalled at the brutal murder of so many Jews, including some who had worked for him, Schindler transformed himself from a money-grubbing opportunist to a fierce defender of his Schindlerjuden ("Schindler's Jews," as they called themselves), not only keeping them fed and clothed at his own expense, but also using his charm (and bribes) to protect them from arrest or deportation by the SS.

And then, in 1944, as the German army retreated before the Soviet Army's march into Poland, the SS began dismantling the concentration camps and moving prisoners westward. Notified that his factory would also be shut down, Schindler persuaded the SS to let him move his factory to Czechoslovakia, and he presented the SS with a list – the famous "Schindler's list" – of some 1,200 Jewish workers who were to move with him, and so be spared certain death. And so survive the war.

Schindler's post-war years were somewhat controversial. Yad Vashem, the Jewish society charged with honoring "Righteous Gentiles" for helping Jews escape the Holocaust, initially refused to honor Schindler, given his Nazi Party background and original exploitation of Jewish labor. But the Schindlerjuden rallied to his defense, noting that he had saved their lives at a huge risk to his own.

As a result, today among the trees dedicated to "Righteous Gentiles" that line the path to the Yad Vashem Holocaust memorial in Jerusalem, is a tree planted for Schindler, who died this week (Oct. 9) in 1974. The tree is easy to spot, the ground around it having been worn down by countless visitors wanting to honor this brave, righteous, and justifiably famous man.

Panetta piles on with new book 'Worthy Fights'

By ANN MCFEATTERS
McClatchy-Tribune News Service

Quickly. Name the president of the United States.

Like millions, you may have a moment of doubt. Is it still Barack Obama? Did we elect Hillary or Jeb Bush yet?

Sadly for Republicans and many Democrats seeking office, the answer is Obama.

Even as candidates are running as far as possible from the president, the most popular American just a few years ago, Obama now seems rather irrelevant.

Oh, he is still the GOP's favorite punching bag. Even though the Affordable Care Act is working out well for millions, the House has voted more than 50 times to repeal or change Obamacare. (It just seems like 1,000 times.) Republicans have not directly blamed the president for the Ebola outbreak in West Africa, but they are pondering how they can without seeming completely caddish.

But the real development is how many Obama followers are abandoning him.

They once pointed out, using all their fingers and toes, the many crises the president had been called on to address, from the worst financial meltdown since the Great Depression to the BP oil spill in the Gulf. They noted how calm he is in disasters, how beloved he was overseas, what a fine father and husband he is, how wonderfully thoughtful and professorial his demeanor,

Now, they worry about how professorial he is, how cautious, how slow to make a decision, how Europe hates him, how reluctant he is to take on the enemy (e.g., Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., the evil Bashar al-Assad of Syria and the malevolent Vladimir Putin).

There are more Democrats who don't want Obama to show up to campaign for them than there are Dems who have invited him to stand beside him addressing voters. Sometimes, as in a Colorado race, the president shows up for the rally but the Democrat is absent.

Now comes Leon Panetta, 76, Obama's former CIA director and defense secretary, Bill Clinton's former chief of staff and a politician genuinely liked by everyone, to proclaim his disappointment with Obama.

It takes the form of a book (the modern version of Brutus' knife). In "Worthy Fights," Panetta expresses dismay and frustration, contending Obama has failed to be a gifted leader in turbulent times.

While he admires Obama's instincts and intellect, calling him realistic and pragmatic, Panetta finds him too reluctant to engage in the fight. He defends the president against the personal attacks of the right-wing, insisting Obama is no left-wing ideologue. But he finds Obama too passionless in defending his progressive vision of America.

So do former Secretary of Defense Robert Gates and former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton. And so do millions of former followers, many frightened by global political changes and the failure of the American middle-class to thrive.

OMG! Do we have another Woodrow Wilson in the White House? Wilson, another Ivy Leaguer, was a fine historian and a visionary president who became too remote and ineffectual to psych up the electorate. Wilson helped win World War I but failed after an exhausting campaign to convince Americans of the need for the League of Nations.

(Historians, beginning to reassess Wilson's accomplishments in office, warn against judging presidents too soon. For example, Truman had a rough go in office but now is seen as a talented president.)

Obama, much grayer, seems tired and disillusioned. All supporters, even the lukewarm, point out that his tenure has been marked by appalling partisanship on both sides. But they blame Republicans more because they refused to work with Obama time and again, even when it was clearly in the public interest, as when they caused a costly government shutdown.

We have Obama for two more years, and the prospect seems dreary. But if he is as smart as everyone insists he is, he has time to seize the bully pulpit, electrify the electorate and beef up his legacy.

Clinton papers on Lewinsky, others released

By KEN THOMAS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The White House strategy to defend President Bill Clinton against the political fallout of his affair with intern Monica Lewinsky is detailed in documents the National Archives released Friday, part of a batch of records that might shed light on painful chapters in Hillary Rodham Clinton's life as she ponders another bid for the presidency.

The papers include lists of talking points, questions prepared for media interviews and efforts to defend the president against impeachment, part of 10,000 pages of records being released from the Clinton administration.

Many records involving Lewinsky are redacted, but one document sheds light on her job: Lewinsky sent an official request to hang a picture of Clinton, signing a telecommunications bill, in a White House legislative affairs office. Behind the scenes, Clinton officials were adamant that they were not trying to discredit Lewinsky.

"There is no evidence whatsoever that the White House was directing or involved in any campaign against her," Clinton aide Sidney Blumenthal wrote in a January 1999 memo.

The papers touch on the Whitewater investigation into Bill and Hillary Clinton's land dealings in Arkansas, the 1993 death of Deputy White House Counsel Vincent Foster and pardons Bill Clinton granted in the final hours as president.

The papers show that the Republican-led investigation into Foster's suicide infuriated the White House, which tried to recruit bestselling author William Styron to write a piece critical of the probe. Clinton communications specialists even drafted a piece for the novelist and author of a memoir of his own depression. It is unclear if the piece was ever published.

With these documents the National Archives will have released about 30,000 pages of papers since February. Both the Obama White House and the Clinton Presidential Library in Little Rock, Arkansas, have signed off on their release.

In addition to the 1990s-era events, the papers touch on Elena Kagan, now a Supreme Court justice, who as a White House counsel defended Bill Clinton in the lawsuit brought by ex-Arkansas state employee Paula Jones. Clinton's testimony for the Jones lawsuit, in which he denied a sexual relationship with Lewinsky, led to his impeachment in 1998. The House approved two articles of impeachment against Clinton, but he was acquitted by the Senate.

In one document, an aide notes then Maryland Gov. Parris Glendening, a Democrat, explained "why he felt he needed to distance himself" from Clinton.

Hillary Clinton's influence in the White House is also expected to be explored in the papers, from her role on Clinton's unsuccessful health care overhaul plan to her 2000 Senate campaign in New York. Bill Clinton left office in January 2001.

Past installments have offered an unvarnished look at Bill Clinton's two terms, detailing his unsuccessful attempt to change the health care system, Republicans' sweeping victories in the 1994 midterm elections and the shaping of his wife's public image.

Hillary Clinton, who went on to serve as a senator from New York and as President Barack Obama's secretary of state, now is a powerful advocate for Democrats in the midterm elections and the leading Democratic prospect for president in 2016. The possibility of a presidential campaign has heightened interest in the documents by media organizations, political opposition researchers and historians.

WASHINGTON — Four former senior government officials will lead an independent review of the embattled Secret Service after the disclosure of a series of breaches in presidential security, the Homeland Security Department announced Friday.

Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson said the four panelists — two who served during the Obama administration and two from the administration of former President George W. Bush — will submit their findings and recommendations for White House security by Dec. 15.

The panelists are former Obama administration Associate Attorney General Tom Perrelli; former Deputy Attorney General Mark Filip, who served during Bush's term; Danielle Gray, a former assistant to the president for President Barack Obama; and Joe Hagin, deputy chief of staff for operations during the Bush administration.

Peace Prize

person from each of the nuclear-armed neighbors in South Asia made "a great statement from the Nobel committee looking at the present scenarios between India and Pakistan."

This would not be the first time the Peace Prize has apparently engaged in this kind of political engineering.

In 2009, the committee awarded Barack Obama after the U.S. president visited Middle Eastern nations estranged during the previous Bush administration. Fifteen years earlier, the award went to the trio of Yitzhak Rabin, Yasser Arafat and Shimon Peres after an apparent breakthrough in Israeli-Palestinian peace talks, though it never led to a deal.

And in 1996, the committee awarded Timorese Carlos Filipe Ximenes Belo and Josi Ramos-Horta, which many believe was critical in the peaceful cessation of East Timor from Indonesia in 2001.

"Often the committee tries to bring people in conflict together and see how they can build new bridges," said Oslo-based Nobel historian Oeivind Stenersen.

It "tries to find people seeking new ways and solutions in difficult conflicts," he said. This year's choice "makes sense because the committee has been able to combine a lot of themes, including a brotherhood between India and Pakistan. They have done this in a very clever way."

But others said it wasn't likely to work.

"It is tempting to see the Nobel Peace Prize announcement as a nuanced message to Pakistan and India to stop shelling each other across the border and start protecting children," said London-based writer and human rights activist Salil Tripathi. "Whether that will sway the hardliners on both sides is of course a different question."

Independent Pakistani political analyst Hasan Askari Rizvi in Lahore said the nations' animosity was so deeply rooted that "I don't see any positive impact of the award on two societies," especially while battles continued along the Kashmiri border.

Still, the two countries have much in common – and much of what they have in common is not good.

Both India and Pakistan today face serious challenges in lifting their people out of poverty, though each is beset by its own challenges in doing so. India, a bubbling democracy with a fast-growing economy, has been overwhelmed by the scale by which it needs to improve people's lives, with a 1.2 billion population that is still growing. Pakistan, with a gross domestic product equal to just a quarter India's stock exchange daily trade, is much further behind in generating power, building infrastructure and establishing security. It is also widely seen as being controlled by an entrenched and opaque military establishment often accused of cozying up to militant jihadists.

And as was underscored by Friday's award, child labor and abuse are widespread, and largely ignored, in both India and Pakistan.

Satyarthi has been at the forefront of a global movement to end child slavery and exploitative child labor since 1980, and has led the rescue of tens of thousands of child slaves and developed a successful model for their education and rehabilitation. He has also survived several attempts on his life.

Malala, who now lives with her family in the British city of Birmingham, was shot in the head by a Taliban gunman in Pakistan for insisting that girls as well as boys have the right to an education. Surviving several operations with the help of British medical care, she continued both her activism and her studies.

"The nature of the work is quiet, because it doesn't involve any violence, any strident protests or noisy demonstrations," said Ashis Nandy political psychologist and social theorist with the Delhi-based Center for the Study of Developing Society. "These children don't have any vote, so it's very difficult to politicize this issue."

In its early days, the peace prize was given for efforts to end or prevent armed conflicts. Swedish industrialist Alfred Nobel said it should go to "the person who shall have done the most or the best work for fraternity between nations, for the abolition or reduction of standing armies and for the holding and promotion of peace congresses."

The committee has interpreted those instructions differently over time, widening the concept of peace work to include efforts to improve human rights, fight poverty, clean up the environment – and, this year, to promote children's rights. With the subtext, as well, of bringing India and Pakistan a bit closer together.

"The Nobel Committee has shown a lot of imagination," Nandy said. "I hope both sides see this as an opportunity to open up, though I'm afraid it will turn into the usual nationalist claptrap."

Despite their many differences, 17-year-old Yousafzai and 60-year-old Satyarthi will be forever linked, co-winners of the 2014 Nobel Peace Prize, honored for risking their lives for the rights of children to education and to lives free of abuse.

to have the numbers we've had – that's pretty strong."

Wright said that since 2010, Harbor Shores has accounted for about 35 percent of lot sales in the St. Joseph, Benton Harbor and Stevensville market area.

"We are developing additional land to add supply for what we believe will be an increased real estate demand in 2015 and 2016," Kerry said. "Enclave is ideal for second home owners who don't want to break the bank, and the Villas are going to be a tremendous stay-and-play addition as we move toward becoming more of a golf destination."

Kerry said that so far in 2014, 16 Harbor Shores units have been sold, outpacing the total of 14 from 2013. He predicts that 20 units will be sold by year end, an increase of more than 25 percent over last year.

Another playoff bid

Lakeshore easily defeats Benton Harbor, clinches share of SMAC West

By AL AREND
HP Sports Correspondent

STEVENSVILLE — Lakeshore's football team wasted little time in guaranteeing its 17th straight playoff appearance Friday night.

Lakeshore 49, Benton Harbor 12

First-year head coach Bryan Keim's Lancers jumped out to a 35-0 first-quarter lead and substituted freely the rest of the way in beating outmanned Benton Harbor 49-12 in a Southwestern Michigan Athletic Conference West Division mismatch.

The victory improved Lakeshore to 4-0 in the West giving it at least a share of the division title, and 6-1 overall.

"I was proud of our kids," said Keim. "I wanted to make sure we played at our level and sometimes that's tough to do against an inexperienced team.

"Everybody got in and got a lot of snaps, so that was good," added Keim. "We pulled our starters after that fourth TD in the first (quarter)."

Lakeshore's first-quarter touchdowns came quick after fullback Sam Effa opened the scoring on a 36-yard run. Zach Schuman then recovered a blocked punt in the Tigers end zone before Effa added a 7-yard scoring scamper.

Quarterback Chayse Magrane then hit Andy Branch on a 4-yard TD aerial and Robert Dente tacked on a 7-yard run to make it 35-0 with 27 seconds left in the opening period.

It became 49-0 in the second quarter when Zach Schultz returned a pass interception 40 yards to pay dirt and Trevor Knuth took in a quarterback keeper from a yard out.

Benton Harbor got on the scoreboard with 1:43 left in half on a 1-yard plunge by Percy Brown. Brown added another TD on a 3-yard burst early in

Berrien Springs beats South Haven to stay tied atop Wolverine West

By ADAM KARNIK

BERRIEN SPRINGS — It wasn't very pretty but Berrien Springs slugged out an important Wolverine West conference win Friday night 20-6 against visiting South Haven.

Berrien Springs 20, South Haven 6

The Shamrocks overcame 10 penalties and three turnovers in the victory.

"South Haven was physical," Berrien Springs coach Bill Bergan said. "They played fast and got us to make some mistakes we don't normally make."

The Shamrocks defense led the way with five takeaways and held the Rams offense to just 148 yards and a rushing average of 3.93 yards per carry.

"That was key for us tonight," Bergan said. "Whenever we needed a turnover we got one. Our guys just were ripping at the ball and it started coming out."

"They shut our run game down and that forced us to throw in situations we wouldn't normally," South Haven coach Troy Ayotte said. "Give them credit, they're a physical football team."

Freshman TJ Jones sealed the win by intercepting South Haven quarterback Devon Smiley with 4:15 to go in the game. It was Jones' second interception of the contest.

"(Jones) has come a long way in seven games," said Bergan. "He's gonna be a great player for us."

Berrien Springs (3-0 Wolverine West, 5-2) could have closed the game out on the prior drive but a holding penalty wiped out what would have been a fourth down 10-yard touchdown pass from Johnie Boone to John Lewis. The Shamrocks then turned the ball

Late pick dooms Bears

Niles upends St. Joseph for 1st time since 2005

By AUSTIN BORNHEIM
HP Sports Writer

NILES — St. Joseph's offense had a chance to erase all of the Bears' mistakes with one final drive.

Niles 27, St. Joseph 21

The Bears had overcome a slow start and periods poor play on both sides of the ball to have a chance to tie or win the game in the waning seconds.

But Niles, as it had all night, came up with a momentum-changing play when it needed one.

Cornerback Warren Smith jumped in front of a Cullen Hoffman pass in the end zone to seal a 27-21 Niles win over the Bears.

The win is the Vikings' first over St. Joseph since 2005.

"We made a few plays to get back in it, and took a couple shots at the end but couldn't quite get it done," St. Joseph coach Gandalf Church said. "It's disappointing. I feel like we should have won this game."

St. Joseph (2-2 SMAC-West, 4-3) blocked a punt down by six with 1:41 left to set itself up with a short field to try and take a game that Niles dominated statistically.

Two Sam Turak runs followed by a Hoffman scramble put the Bears on the Vikings 8-yard line with 44 seconds to play.

After spiking the ball on first down, Hoffman dropped back and targeted Domoneke Mitchell in the corner of the end zone.

Mitchell, who beat Niles' Smith earlier in the fourth quarter for a 33-yard touchdown to tie the game at 21, was open for a brief moment before Smith recovered and snagged the game-deciding interception.

"He's a heck of competitor and we trust him out there," Jones said. "He got beat earlier, but he made up for it. He's an athletic kid and that's why he's out there, to make a play. That's what he did."

The loss moves Niles (2-2, 5-2) one game closer to its first playoff berth since 2003.

"We are very happy about it. Happy for the kids," Jones said.

Lake Michigan Catholic can't stop Klepper, Mendon

By BEN SANDERS
HP Sports Writer

Mendon 48, Catholic 0

ST. JOSEPH — Lake Michigan Catholic had problems containing many Mendon players on Friday night — especially Elijah Klepper.

Mendon won 48-0 behind a huge game from Klepper, who had seven carries for 196 yards and three touchdowns.

"We played a great team tonight," Catholic coach Steve Graziano said. "We're a young team, we have some injuries. The kids played hard the whole game, that's what I told them. That's a good team we played tonight."

Mendon (6-1), ranked No. 8 in Division 8, got on the board before its offense even took the field. After Catholic (3-3) went three-and-out on its opening possession, Klepper returned the ensuing punt 64 yards for a touchdown to put the Hornets up 7-0.

When Mendon had the ball, Klepper continued to dominate. He scored from 39 yards out on the Hornets' first offensive play, and added touchdown runs of 38 and 79 yards as Mendon built a 42-0 halftime lead.

"He's a horse," Mendon coach John Schwartz said. "He's a three-year varsity kid. He's just getting stronger and stronger every year, and he's really come in to his own."

The Hornets were strong through the air, getting a

Caro High School ends football season early

CARO, Mich. (AP) — A mid-Michigan high school decided to end its varsity football season early due to serious player injuries.

Caro High School has canceled the rest of its season with just three games left to play, WEYI-TV reported. The team collectively made the decision with the support of two-thirds of its players.

"It was, for lack of a better term, painful," Superintendent Mike Joslyn said.

But the school was taking too much risk, according to Joslyn. Three of the players had concussions, and four or five suffered season-ending injuries, he said.

The varsity coach was forced to move up younger players who were smaller than their older opponents, according to the superintendent.

"He came to us and said, 'I'm real concerned about my players' safety.' It's not about wins and losses, it's not about points on the scoreboard," Joslyn said.

Caro is a Class B school with 524 students.

ND's Russell says he won't play this year

SOUTH BEND (AP) — Notre Dame cornerback KeiVarae Russell posted a message on social media Friday saying he will not play football this season and will likely miss the spring semester.

"Though disappointed in the decision the school has just recently made after 2 longs months of waiting for a decision to come, I accept it and will make sure I spend my time away efficiently," Russell wrote in the posting on Instagram.

Notre Dame spokesman Michael Bertsch confirmed the posting was from Russell. Russell didn't reply to telephone messages or texts from The Associated Press.

Russell, who was expected to be one of the team's top players, and four other players have been held out of practices and games since August while the university determined if they were involved in academic dishonesty.

The university announced on Aug. 15 it was investigating whether Russell, receiver DaVaris Daniels, defensive end Ishaq Williams, linebacker Kendall Moore had turned in papers and homework completed by others. Defensive back Eilar Hardy was added two weeks later.

10 turnovers, easy win for Lawrence

No. 2-ranked Tigers blast Heston Academy

By AARON GREEN
HP Sports Writer

LAWRENCE — The only thing more impressive than the Lawrence offense Friday night may have been the Tigers' defense.

Lawrence 71 Charlton Heston 0

The Lawrence defense forced 10 turnovers and limited Charlton Heston Academy to one total net yard in a 71-0 blowout win over the Patriots to remain undefeated.

Charlton Heston (0-5) finally reached positive yards on the last play from scrimmage when quarterback Anthony Peters scrambled for 12 yards.

Before that, Charlton Heston had run 45 plays for minus-11 yards.

Lawrence (7-0), ranked second in the eight-man division, recovered four fumbles and had six interceptions returning one for a touchdown.

"Our defensive coordinator Aaron Amthor does a great job of preparing the kids," Lawrence coach Cody Caswell said. "The kids played hard all night and flew to the football."

The Tigers' offense was almost as good, scoring touchdowns on nine of its first 10 possessions.

Lawrence racked up 358 yards on only 20 offensive plays in the game to average almost 18 yards a play.

The Tigers are outscoring their seven opponents by an average of 61-6.

"We executed on the plays we were able to run," Caswell said. "That is what we look for."

The only blip came on Lawrence's first play from scrimmage, when quarterback Derek Gribler underthrew Matt Cammire and was intercepted by Nathaniel Desnyder.

Desnyder fumbled the ball during his return and the Tigers recovered.

The Tigers put the game away early as Gribler hit Cammire on two touchdown passes and Hunter Coombs returned an interception 45 yards to make the score 24-0 less than three minutes into the game.

Gribler would throw five touchdown passes in the first half.

When Vito Williams ran in from 30 yards out midway through the second quarter to make the score 65-0, both coaches decided to have a continuous clock the rest of the game.

"Our goal is the same as it has been since the beginning of the season, to win a state title," Caswell said. "We have two big games left against a playoff bound Burr Oak team and a big one with St. Phillip before we start a run at our goal."

Gribler led the way offensively, completing six of eight passes for 106 yards.

Marco Tule rushed only twice for 88 yards.

"We tried to do the right-sporting thing in the second half," Caswell said. "We have been there before ourselves."

Lawrence wore special camouflaged uniforms during the game to honor veterans.

The Tigers selected a veteran to honor and wore that veteran's name on the back of his jersey.

They jersey was presented to the honored veteran during a ceremony at the end of the game.

Lawrence raised more than $600 for the Veterans War Memorial.

the fourth to end the scoring.

Brown, a sophomore, showed promise rushing for 107 yards on 22 carries, mostly against the Lakeshore reserves.

"I've made a decision to play our sophomores in more key spots in hopes of building toward the future," said Benton Harbor coach Mike Gillespie, who dressed 24 for the game including 12 sophomores. "We have to see what we have. They have to see what Friday nights are all about. But I'll also continue to roll in the key seniors in spots. We have to develop a spring and summer weight and conditioning program in order to compete in this conference, and that will take some time."

Lakeshore, rated No. 9 in Division 3, has two games left against Mattawan (4-3) and Niles (5-2), which upset St. Joseph Friday night.

"The only game on our mind right now is Mattawan," noted Keim.

A victory over the Wildcats next Friday would give the Lancers an outright SMAC West Division crown.

Bears

"As coaches though, we take it one at a time. So that's what we did this week and that's what we'll do this next week."

For St. Joseph, it makes the last two weeks of the season must-win games in order to secure a spot in the postseason.

The Vikings came out and dominated play early.

After forcing the Bears the punt on the game's opening possession, Niles quarterback Alex Harpenau led a 95-yard scoring drive to take a 7-0 lead.

Niles scored on its next possession to take a 15-0 lead on a Harpenau 5-yard pass to receiver Ra'Quon Glenn.

St. Joseph responded with a touchdown of its own on a Hoffman 1-yard run, but the Vikings answered quickly.

On the first play of the ensuing drive, Joseph Avance, who scored the first Niles' touchdown, dashed 78 yards untouched for his second of the game.

"Our offense started out hot and we had some really good blocks and some good plays called," Jones said. "Our guys came out and executed very well."

A Hoffman field goal as time expired in the first half and another in the third quarter closed the gap to 21-13.

St. Joseph then completed the comeback with the Mitchell touchdown reception to tie the game.

The Bears appeared to have the momentum on defense at that point. St. Joseph had limited Niles to just 23 yards of total offense after the Vikings had scored on their first three drives. But Harpenau and the Vikings came up with points when they needed them.

Niles would complete a nine-play, 78-yard drive with a Ra'Quon Glenn 7-yard touchdown reception on fourth down.

Harpenau finished 16 of 30 for 163 yards and two touchdowns.

"We were flowing very well," Harpenau said. "But none of it could be done without the line. They were great tonight. And the receivers were catching a lot of balls."

St. Joseph's running attack struggled all night against a stout Niles front. The Bears finished the game with a 2.9 yards per carry average and had 15 carries of a yard or less.

"The blocked us well, we didn't do that so well," Church said. "They outplayed us in a lot of ways."

St. Joseph will travel to play Battle Creek Lakeview next week.

pair of touchdown passes from Jordan Medich. The first was a short pass that Connor Briggs turned into a 33-yard score, and the second a 42-yarder to Nathan Dedes, who was wide open after the Laker defense bit on a fake to Klepper.

Mendon outgained Catholic 415-41. Jeremiah McCoy led the Lakers with 15 carries for 24 yards before leaving the game with an injury just before halftime.

"Right now our three starting backs are out," Graziano said. "We had some freshmen step up tonight. (McCoy's) been battling ankle (injuries) all year. We'll get him healthy hopefully for next week."

Catholic can still qualify for the state playoffs if it wins its final two games. The Lakers will host Centreville (3-4) next week and close the season at New Buffalo.

"We're going to get ready, get healthy and we'll win two," Graziano said. "Let's go 5-3 and get in the playoffs."

Mendon had a 35-game regular season win streak snapped by Watervliet earlier this season. The Hornets had eight players suspended for that game, but have since won four straight.

"Our kids expect to win," Schwartz said. "Not being arrogant, but you don't ever go into any game or season expecting to lose. Our kids, they play to win constantly. We're proud of them.

"The only slip-up we had was when we had some kids suspended, and we grew up from that. We're a better team because of it as far as I'm concerned."

over on downs the next play.

On offense, the Shamrocks were led by the two-man ground attack of senior quarterback Boone and senior running back Malik McIntyre. The two combined for 267 of the team's 298 offensive yards.

"Offensively, they executed very well," said Ayotte. "They beat us on perimeter blocking and opened things up."

Boone was the game's leading rusher with 141 yards on 17 carries and the game's first touchdown. He also added 31 aerial yards and completed five of his six passing attempts.

"(Boone) did a great job tonight," said Bergan. "They made things tough on him but he made the adjustments and lead the team, which was awesome to see."

"I'm just proud of the team," Boone said. "We came out in that second half and battled our tails off."

McIntyre added 126 yards on a game-high 18 carries and two second half touchdowns.

McIntyre's first touchdown came with 4:31 to go in the third and required a nifty move to evade the bulk of the Rams defense in the open field and scamper in from 33 yards away. That touchdown gave the Shamrocks some breathing room at 14-6.

South Haven (1-2, 2-5) had trouble getting anything going all night. Along with the five turnovers, the Rams committed four second-half penalties that stalled drives and were unable to take advantage of Berrien Springs' miscues.

The Rams did mount one good offensive drive to close out the first half. After Boone gave Berrien Springs the lead, the Rams went into a two-minute drive capped with Smiley hitting junior running back from eight yards out and four seconds on the clock to pull the Rams to within one. The extra point was blocked, however, and the Shamrocks went into the half leading 7-6 and never looked back.

With the win Berrien Springs is now eligible for the playoffs and can earn an automatic birth with a win in one if its final two games. A win over Edwardsburg next week would virtually guarantee the Shamrocks not only a playoff birth but also at least a share of the Wolverine West title.

"(A playoff berth) is the furthest thing from your mind at the beginning of the season but I'm excited for the opportunity," said Bergan. "This is a good group of guys that likes playing with each other. They're a good team."

"That's awesome," Boone said. "Hopefully we can keep on rolling."

Digital fitness monitor helps you adopt healthier lifestyle

DEAR DOCTOR K: I'd like to be more active. Do you think a digital fitness monitor will help?

DEAR READER: When digital fitness monitors (DFMs) became available several years ago, I was initially skeptical. I figured they would be the latest example of our fascination with electronic devices and that people would quickly tire of them.

Well, surveys show that some people have quickly tired of them and left them to collect dust in a drawer. However, many folks use them consistently and swear by them. Different strokes for different folks.

DFMs come in wearable styles such as wristbands, watches and pendants, or hand-held pieces you can clip onto a sleeve or slip into a pocket. They monitor one or more things that affect your physical fitness. They also nag you when you've fallen behind your personal goals – but it's hard to get mad at them.

DFM features may be simple, tracking the number of steps you take or the calories you burn. Or they may be more sophisticated, capturing your heart rate and sleep patterns. Some have alarms that remind you to be more active, or announce that you've reached a goal. Most allow you to chart your progress online. Many let you virtually compete with family and friends.

But do DFMs make you more active? Research suggests they do. In an analysis of 26 studies, pedometer users added more than 2,000 steps per day to their baseline over 18 weeks. More important, they lowered their blood pressure and body mass index.

Dr. Anthony Komaroff

DFM prices vary widely. If you're strapped for cash, buy a basic pedometer, which simply counts your steps.

Once you have a DFM, determine your baseline by wearing the pedometer for three days from the time you get up until bedtime.

Divide the total steps taken by three, to get an idea of your average steps per day. Each week, add 500 steps per day until you reach your goal. Many experts recommend aiming for 10,000 steps a day.

With or without a DFM, it's a good idea to add more walking to your routine. Dr. Richard Ginsburg, a psychologist with Harvard-affiliated Massachusetts General Hospital, suggests the following to sneak more steps into your day:

- Get a dog. You'll have to walk the animal at least once or twice a day.
- Consider sports. Take up golf, for example, which involves a lot of walking.
- Visit walking-only destinations. You could log a few miles at a museum, botanical garden or amusement park.
- Window-shop at the mall. One lap around an average mall's upper level ranges from a quarter to a half mile.

For people who really want to adopt a healthier lifestyle, digital fitness monitors make it easier to do. Some of my patients, and my friends, seem almost obsessed with them.

One of my patients has chosen not just to average 10,000 steps a day – he has to beat that number every day. This is a healthy obsession to have!

Overlooked middle child's cries for help go unheeded

DEAR ABBY: I'm a teenage girl who is frustrated with my family. I am the middle child, and it seems like my parents prefer my brother and sister over me. I am constantly in trouble for things they have done, and my parents are aware that they did.

When I try to express my feelings, nobody will listen. Several times I have almost committed suicide or run away. I am lost and I don't know what to do. Please help me. – Nowhere in Indiana

DEAR NOWHERE: When a person cries out in pain and feels she (or he) isn't heard, it can be doubly painful. But suicide or running away is not the answer. What you need to do is explain to an adult – an aunt, uncle, school counselor or close family friend – how you are feeling, so that person can intercede on your behalf with your parents, who may not realize what they're doing and the effect it's having on you.

DEAR ABBY: How long is too long to wait when it comes to hearing the highly anticipated phrase, "I love you"? My boyfriend and I have been dating for eight months. We have been through a lot together during this time, and his actions suggest that he loves me. When I finally asked him why he hasn't said it to me, he said, "Why haven't you said it?" "I want it to happen naturally," and, "Just be patient with me." We get along amazingly well. We have a wonderful time every time we see each other (which is almost every day), and he has told me he can see a future with me. Am I wrong for thinking I deserve to hear the "L" word at this point, or am I rushing things? I don't understand why he is so reluctant to say it, and his reluctance makes me think maybe he just doesn't love me. – Still Waiting in New Jersey

Jeanne Phillips

Dear Abby

DEAR STILL WAITING: Not all men are comfortable expressing their emotions verbally. Actions speak louder than words. Many men have told women they "love" them, only to have their behavior prove otherwise.

That your boyfriend has given you three different answers to your question indicates to me that you may have been pushing him to say it. I would caution you against that because it could push him away. Hearing the words "I love you" isn't something a person "deserves." It's important that the words be genuine.

DEAR ABBY: When I approach someone to hug, is there a correct side to go for? Does a relative or friend have a bearing on your choice, or does it matter if it's a man or woman or how well you know them? Is the left side as good as the right side? – Which Side? in Ohio

DEAR WHICH SIDE: Hugging anyone you don't know well is a mistake because some people have an aversion to intimate contact with strangers. That said, I don't think it matters a lot which side you "go for" – although I have heard some people bear to the left because that way their hearts are closer together. Personally, I tend to feint to the left because I'm left-handed – but that's just me.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Contact Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

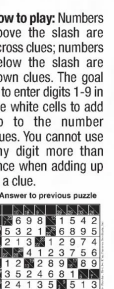
Answer to previous puzzle



Bridge

All top bridge players are good at math. But a lot of the sums should not be beyond anyone. Look at today's South hand. Partner opens one club, East passes, South responds one spade, West intervenes with two hearts, North passes, and East passes. What should South do now?

At the table, South, someone who has been successful in his career, passed out two hearts. What was he thinking? As soon as North opened one club, South should have said to himself, "I have 14 points; we are bidding at least game."

South should have made a takeout double. North would have bid two spades, showing three-card support. (With four spades, he would have raised to two spades on round two.) Then South would have jumped to four spades.

How should South plan the play in four spades after West leads the club queen?

One other point in the auction: East should not have passed over two hearts with four trumps and a void. He should have bid (three or) four hearts.

South is faced with losers in each suit. But he will survive just as long as he plays low from the dummy at trick one. Suppose East ruffs (it is stronger defense to discard) and shifts to a heart. (South won't misguess that suit if left to himself.) West wins and gives his partner another ruff – again, declarer must play a low club from the dummy. Say East exits with a heart to dummy's king. Declarer draws trumps, cashes his club king, crosses to dummy with a diamond, and discards his diamond loser on the club ace to get home.

HOROSCOPE

By EUGENIA LAST

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11

The rewards you get for your hard work will mean more if you have someone to share them with. Keep your personal relationships strong and include your loved ones in your dreams and aspirations. Finding the right balance will result in happiness for all concerned.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Curtail your spending habits. Putting some money into a long-term investment will lessen your temptation to overspend. You should also set up a reasonable budget and stick to it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Someone around you will not give a true assessment of a situation you face. Discreet inquiries will enable you to find out the truth. Don't be too free with your personal information.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You will gain more respect and help if you treat your partners as equals. Whether at home or at work, people appreciate fairness as well as praise.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Stay on top of your game. Opportunities come and go quickly. Keep up to date with industry trends and get in touch with potential partners.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Clear the air. If there is discord among the people you live with, you need to conduct a serious dialogue in order to remedy the situation. Don't ignore the obvious.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Don't pass on a chance to travel. Keep your passport and personal papers up to date so that you will be ready to go at a moment's notice.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You can accomplish plenty if you put in overtime at work. Not only will you clear your schedule, you can gain recognition from your superiors and bring in extra cash.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Quick decisions will be your downfall. Avoid buying things on impulse, and don't fly off the handle if your partner offers friendly advice. Think things through before you act.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Keep your personal and professional lives separate. An emotional attachment to a co-worker is likely to cause mistrust and dissatisfaction among your other colleagues. Keep your mind on the job, not on who's watching you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Children will have a positive effect on your day. New relationships are possible if you participate in family-oriented events or activities. Get out and enjoy what your community has to offer.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Plan to do something that allows you to be introspective. Reading, writing or listening to music will help calm your nerves. Discussions will be less than satisfactory.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) If you feel restless, check out local educational opportunities. For inspiration, consider learning a new language, doing some painting or taking part in a discussion group that offers cultural information.
